1. THE MISSION OF THE PROGRAM

The Graduate School in the Humanities has as its main mission the training of specialists in long-term research in the field within a comprehensive cultural context. The PhD students are encouraged to become creative, autonomous researchers with critical thinking skills. The students are given ample opportunities to exercise and improve both professional and transversal competences, aimed at planning and assessing their work, as well as improving attitudes, values and procedures. The research is finalised by the defense of the PhD thesis. The Graduate School in the Humanities promotes the development of excellence in fundamental and applied research meant to improve the standards of higher education by the promotion of interdisciplinary research partnerships and activity at both national and international levels, given the pronounced interdisciplinary nature of research in both fields of the graduate school.

2. CAREER OPPORTUNITIES IN KEEPING WITH PROFESSIONAL QUALIFICATIONS

Academics and pre-university teachers, ready to assume leading positions in the education system;
Civil servants at various levels (local councils, executives and advisors in the fields of research, development and human resources);
Instructors and trainers of foreign languages;
Archivists and curators;
Librarians and specialists in information;
Authors and journalists in domestic and foreign affairs;
Translators and interpreters, language specialists.

3. ADMISSION to the PhD program. The admission contest for the PhD candidates is held in September, according to the approved schedule. It consists in an interview during which the scholarly skills and preoccupations are assessed, as well as the familiarity with the research topics promoted by the graduate school and the research topic submitted by the candidate.

4. DEGREE

PhD Diploma in Philology or History certified by the Ministry of National Education.
